Artist statement
Point of View 3.14 Series

π (Pi) is one of the most important mathematical constants. It is the ratio of any circle's circumference to its diameter. The fascination with the number's simplicity and irrationality became so great that it gained popularity in the non-mathematical world and inspired me to create a group of multidimensional paintings on rolls.

I roll painted strips of canvas, forming each of them into a cylinder row. Lined up alongside one another the curved nature of rolls alters the perception of the painting depending on the viewer's positioning.
